VOL. XXI

The Year Book of the University of Mississippi

PUBLISHED BY THE

SENIOR CLASSES

OF ALL DEPARTMENTS

O THOSE who are represented by this book, to those who by earnest aid and cooperation have helped in the achievement of the records thereof, and to those who feel a true enthusiam and love for Ole Miss,—greetings are given.

If you, who read these pages, gather from them any of the love and friendship that is theirs, if in later years they brighten your eye by recalling dear faces then to-be seen no more, if they bring one perfect hour in the years to come, or if they express the spirit of Ole Miss,—then the effort here expended is not in vain, and we can speak our farewell with a feeling of "Well Done."

FOREWORD

We wish to express our thanks in an humble way to those who have assisted either materially or by kind words of encouragement in the production of this year's annual. We are more than usually appreciative of Chancellor Powers' timely suggestions and helps; he has added largely to whatever may be the success and interest of this book.

We are fully conscious of the fact that there are errors within these pages and that there are also numerous omissions, but the staff has not been sparing of its efforts to avoid them and offers, as a legitimate excuse, the magnitude of the task and the failure on the part of a few to co-operate to the extent of furnishing their portraits, etc.

The staff has attempted to profit by every suggestion which tended to make the book representative of the life and spirit of "Ole Miss." It has been the constant aim of the members of the staff to depict the University as it is today with the hope that it will be a greater one in the future.

In conclusion we submit this little volume trusting that you will not be disappointed in our efforts and that the perusal of its pages now and in after years will be productive of many pleasant memories.

The Staff.

In Gur Alumni

he men and women whose lives and works have added to the material melfare, the moral uplift, and the spiritual influences of our State, whose intellectual achievements have fructified the civilization which they found created and which they have done so much to preserve, whose hearts have throbbed with pride for their Alma Mater in her days of progress and have sorrowed when days of gloom fell around her, whose thoughts turn toward her future with a new and larger vision in consonance with the spirit of a greater age whose minds are thoughtful for her future, proud of her present days of prosperity, with an abiding interest in a righteons conscience which shall ever be hers, and with a fixed determination that the future shall present their influences united for a greater and a hetter University, democratic in its spirit, useful in its service, seeking a stronger and more lasting place in the affections of the people.—To these men and momen whose wisdom has strengthened the councils of State and promoted the civilization of her people, we gratefully and affectionately dedicate this Annual, in this the Centennial Year of our beloved Commonwealth.

Mherever this volume may reach you, it carries as our most ardent hope the wish that it may bring your foster mother to your mind and heart. If you have her and cherish dear memories of her guidance when she sought to nurture you in knowledge, truth, and misdom, she counts her greatest wealth in such memories and such hove. For you are her life and soul. Only as she lives in you and in us is her life vigorous and wholesome, and her soul revewed and perpetuated. Our buildings, libraries, laboratories, are but a cold and futile pageant unless they are lighted by the radiance of our common denotion and loyalty. May this volume, far unworthy of the sentiment it herein innokes, he a token of the love and service we here revew and rededicate to our Alma Mater.

College Life

The lights are off; the screen becomes alive, Bold figures strong with manly grace appear; Awhile they hold the view, and then pass out To be no more recalled. Faint shadow-shapes Of others blur the screen, all indistinct. Perchance a figure, frailer than the rest, Unnoticed by his fellows, sinks amid The throng. And so they come and go.

* * * * * *

The lights are on: and now again are off.
The faithful hand is ever o'er the film.
The old machine fulfils its destiny
Of work. And now another reel goes on.
And other figures come within the view;
Pass in and out * * * and soon another reel
Puts on its shifting personnel.

A Retrospect

"Write me now," you say, "some record of this Senior class, this class of '17." Go, I pray you, search "Little Allie's" book, is it not sufficient that the name be written there? 'Tis only a bare thing you say, not the living and vital things of their achievements. The history of the class of '17 is written in ineffaceable characters on the lives of our comrades and whether beautiful or unlovely "it will never pass into nothingness." How inadequate would be my feeble attempt to trace it.

Let us then attempt nothing more ambitious than an effort to express in some measure the conflicting emotions that arise in our hearts as we stand thus at the parting of the ways.

Behind us stretch the yesterdays, a land lit only by the soft, tender light of memory, smoothing here some hard places with its mellow radiance, and touching there some cherished spot into glory.

And though, as we stand looking back, a feeling of sadness comes o'er us, 'tis not akin to pain and resembles sorrow only as the mist resembles the rain, "for before us stretch the tomorrows radiant and glowing as some enchanted land, and we long to take our "dip" into the future and are eager "for the large excitement the coming years will yield."

But as we go forth from thy protecting shades, "Ole Miss," shall we take with us only our "dip?" God forbid!

The passing years have only made thee wise and tender, "Ole Miss," to understand our youthful joys and tears, for thou art ever the haunt of youth and thy heart is ever young. When we have been gay thy green stretches have invited and thy dancing leaves have laughed a glad response. When we have been sad thy stalwart trees have whispered strength and peace, with their strong branches pointing ever upward. When we have been discouraged thy silent testimonial to that other land of youths, who laid down their lives obedient to their country's call, has rebuked us, and we have realized our heritage. And, under the wise guidance of thy strong men we have felt the faint stirrings of our inner souls expand into life, as they have spread before our eyes the vision of true life.

And now, as we pass, perhaps for the last time, down the old walk that winds over the hill to the footbridge, and as memories crowd thick upon us, we turn and bid thee a last farewell, Ole Miss, and murmur softly, "God bless thee."

HISTORIAN.

Auf Wiedersehn

So—Goodbye! The luring mem'ry of the Alma Mater days now ending oft shall call you back; Dusk and dark, and dawn and day be filled with longing For the fellows, campus, classroom, field and track.

So—Goodbye! Before your face the Future's lying, Grim and vast and cruel with its many a care; Ah, you'll long to stroll again at twilight down the Winding walks with yellow campus lights a-glare.

When the Future calls, we question not, but answer,
And Ambition now is calling you, it's true;
But beneath the laurel wreath with which men crown you,
You'll remember things perhaps they never knew.

Thoughts that fuse their subtle power o'er the happy,
Eager days we've spent together, you and I;
Thoughts so fragile you would hardly think they'd carry
O'er the days, and friends, and miles that interlie!

So—goodbye! Take the hand I now extend you; 'Twill be ready, should you want it, by and by; For the day of Light must alternate with Shadow, In the years that we are facing, you and I!

History of Class of '18

A few weeks after the beginning of the world's greatest war, scores of boys and girls, for their first time, climbed Depot Hill and having safely passed the Charybdis and Scylla of Dr. Hume and Faculty, formed the embryo from which has sprung the present Junior Class, the matchless class of '18.

While Freshmen, the upper classmen were watchful over us, and their motto seemed to be "Spare the brush and spoil the Freshman." But after a year of endurance came a year of arrogance. We threw off our verdancy, and having inherited the heritage of all Sophomores, we did to others as we had been done unto. This year, as Juniors, we are fully able to realize:

What a transformation a short time brings;

A learned Junior from a lowly Freshman springs.

I might begin the enumeration of the great achievements of the class of '18, but mortal life is too short for its completion. Epics might be written and yet the half would not be told.

If the deeds of the future are foretold by those of the past, there are in our class: politicians who will be envied by T. R.; orators, by whose side Webster would seem tongue-tied, and capitalists, in comparison with whom, Rockefeller would feel like a pauper.

We realize that the faculty must be almost in tears because of the short time left for us to be with them, but the affairs of the nation also need the guiding genius of the Juniors, so may the flower of "Ole Miss" which has budded so perfectly in this year's Juniors, be in full-blown blossom in next year's Seniors, and may there again be a class which contains such a galaxy of future orators, statesmen and men-of-affairs as make up the personnel of this great class of '18.

History of Sophomore Class

Rah! Rah! Rah! Mississippi! How our hearts swelled within us as we heard those yells—we, the class of nineteen nineteen—as we came into Oxford on every train during that eventful sixteenth day of September, 1915

But then—Freshmen! Freshmen! Down went our high hopes. We knew that we were the best class that had ever come to "Ole Miss"—one hundred and ninetynine strong. But those terrible sounds overawed us.

Somehow we managed to survive the first nights of laundry-lists and impromptu speeches, then we were at home—to the lofty Sophs.

We had "some" hard time electing our officers, still that famous parade afterwards made up for some of our troubles. But can we forget the awful results of that parade—those fights, yells, and fusses in Madison, Jackson, and Calhoun?

Next came the great basketball games and then that greatest of all games when we '19's defeated the lofty '18's on that cold twelfth of January. But such a weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth followed—for, on that cold winter night, we lost our fair locks. Bald-headed Freshmen we were for months, but such fun we did have!

Some of us had fallen by the wayside on our first exams. Some had fallen by the mighty hand of the Chancellor and the discipline committee. But still the gleat class of '19 plodded its weary way, and passed through the final exams of nineteen fifteen and sixteen.

On September 20, 1916, we reassembled in the classic halls of "Ole Miss"—lofty Sophomores, self appointed guardians of the lowly Freshies. Though somewhat depleted in numbers, we were yet the same great class of nineteen.

Then came those "terrible" troubles of early December—Freshman hair-cutting, fireworks, policemen, discipline committee. At last came that astounding order that all our comrades, who were residents of Gordon Hall, were suspended from school. Such consternation!—then joy, for they were reinstated. Then we who survived happily went our way. We still sustained the wonderful record of our first year.

Watch the class of 1919. Great men and women shall come from it and it will establish a record long to be remembered in the annals of "Ole Miss."

Sixty-nine Years at Ole Miss

There is a certain fascination and charm about all imposing or historic buildings. This fact is due to the influence exercised within their walls and partially to their existence as monuments to the taste and intelligence of their architects and the integrity and skill of their builders.

It is entirely reasonable to believe that the buildings which now constitute the campus group have a place in the affections of the men and women who passed their student days within them and no less occasion exists for the belief that those buildings which have been removed exercised the same influence over the minds and hearts of others.

No more enjoyable an event can be conceived than a great reunion of all the students who ever attended "Ole Miss." If by the rubbing of some sort of an Aladdin's lamp we might all be transported back to that auspicious eighth of November in 1848, the pleasure would be doubled. And if the Genii were truly obliging they might consent to present to the view of the assembly each successive building as it appeared on the campus. What could add more to the entertainment of the guests?

Let us then suppose that we have rubbed the lamp and that the fairy is an accommodating one who gladly assumes the task of reconstructing the University. Once again the campus is a pristine forest filled with murmuring oaks and hickories. William Nicholl, the English architect, appears on the scene and under his direction the monarchs of the forest bow to the woodsman's axe and the fires are kindled in the kilns.

Under the skillful hands of the artisans the Lyceum building soon appears, but it is without the two wings and the central portion does not extend more than two-thirds its present length to the rear. It has a strange appearance to the class of '17 and even the class of 1902 is unprepared for the abbreviated length.

The building which is now Dr. Heddleston's residence is the next to appear and the class of '51 grows hungry at the sight, for to them it is known as Steward's Hall and the term is synonymous with the clang of the dinner bell.

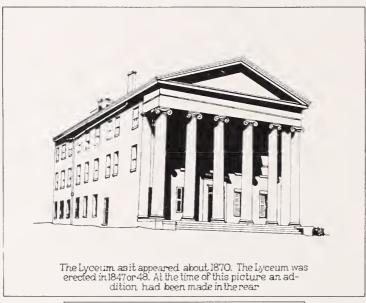

Two three-story double dwellings for professors are next fashioned by the willing workers. One occupies the site of the present library and the other stands opposite in the stead of Gordon Hall. They are the homes of the four members of the original faculty.

With the appearance of two dormitories, one on either side of the Lyceum, the original group is completed and William Nicholl retires from the scene.

The stage is set in readiness for the actors who presently appear. President Holmes issues from his residence on the site of Gordon Hall and proceeds to the Lyceum where the students begin to register. Thomas Elliott Bugg is the first to affix his signature to the roll and the busy quill continues to scratch and scrawl until the eighty names appear on the record. Dinner is served in the course of time at Steward's Hall and the afternoon soon passes as other afternoons have passed on the entrance days that have followed. After supper the lamps are lighted in the buildings on the campus. The boys retire to Jefferson Hall and in due time the extinguished lights announce the close of the first day at "Ole Miss."

To furnish the accustomed surroundings to the class of '53 the chapel is added to the original six and the students of that time meet in the society halls above where the voices of Sricklin and Lamar rise above the others in heated argument.

The throng has increased until the men of '58 require more room and the "Postoffice Dormitory" is built, along exactly the same lines as the other two dormitories, to accommodate them.

Dr. Barnard, the third president and the first Chancellor, passes through the crowd and the students respectfully salute him. He seems more than usually jovial. The secret of it all is that he is again living through the enjoyment of having secured from the legislature the funds necessary for the erection of the Observatory, the Magnetic Observatory and Taylor Hall. Soon the materials arrive on the ground and again the sound of the saw and hammer is heard on the campus. In response to the efforts of the artisans the buildings presently arise. With the exception of Taylor Hall they all look familiar enough to the student of today. Taylor Hall is without a second story on the central part and this portion of the building is used as a dining hall. Some of the early students recall that it later became the headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. and a gynasium successively. Students who entered the preparatory department between the close of the war and 1892 look on the wings of Taylor Hall with many a reminiscent smile.

For the sake of the class of '62 the exciting scenes of the years of the war are rehearsed. Again the "Stars and Bars" float from one building on the campus, while "Old Glory" is seen on another and the "University Greys" are drilling among the trees. The campus is deserted for a time. Of the two hundred and forty students and the eight professors, only Drs. Hilgard and Quinche remain. But in a short time there is more excitement than ever. Wounded begin to arrive from the battlefield of Shiloh. The Chapel and other buildings are converted into a hospital to accommodate them. Grant's approach is announced; the wounded are removed and a horde of Kansas "Jayhawkers" sweep across the paths, leaving a wake of destruction. Grant establishes a Federal hospital at the University and later passes on after burning the town of Oxford. The wounded among General Forrest's men are treated on the campus while he makes his head-quarters in Oxford. The Magnetic Observatory all the while performs the function of a morgue. In all, eighteen hundred men are cared for and of this number seven hundred sleep in unmarked graves in the little cemetery over the hill.

The war is closed and Chancellor Waddell succeeds Dr. Barnard. The student throng continues to increase. Among the entrants of 1882 several timid co-eds appear. The old library which is now the Law Building is built for the class of 1889.

Water works, steam heating and sewerage systems, followed by electric lights are provided for the students of 1899.

The women of the year 1903 meet to discuss politics and art in Rick's Hall, their new home, and wings appear simultaneously on the Lyceum Building. Taylor Hall becomes a part of the domain of Morpheus; a second story is added and the central part is changed to a dormitory.

The hitherto nearly homeless medical students move with the entry of the 1907-08 classes to their new home in the Science Building. One of the old double residences is replaced by Gordon Hall to make a more familiar scene for the Freshmen of 1909 and the student body immediately proposes a dance. A long time passes before they are permitted to hold it.

Mr. Carnegie's check arrives and is received with joy. The north professor's residence is razed and in its place the new Library is quickly produced. The Law Department deserts its old home in Jefferson Hall and takes possession of the original Library. Jefferson Hall is torn down a little later on and the George Peabody Building erected on the site of it to contain the classes of 1912-13.

There is no longer any need for the good fairy's offices in magically altering the appearance of the campus and as his presence fades into the purple silence the living students steal away and the ghostly ones take their places in Chron's barge and are ferried across to the distant shore. It is not long until all that remains of the past on the campus is the invisible heart throbs of friendship and the spirit of "Ole Miss."

DEATH SILENT

*n Memory of Inseph Eli Canderdale

On his breast, two hands at rest,
Wan and pale, are folded there;
Labor's done, the race is won,
God has answered death's sweet prayer.
No word slips those silent lips,
Not a tear shall fall again;
Life is o'er, the final score,
Death has come to still all pain.

Ah! twill fall to one and all,
Sooner—later we meet above;
There in peace when troubles cease
Waits His nobler grander love.
Ye are blest who find that rest
When your soul from earth departs;
Though ye die, beyond the sky
Shall ye join that band of hearts.

Ah! that sleep so sweet so deep, Full of rest and still repose, Never breaks, No! never wakes, Once life's shadows slowly close. The meed of strife, the gate of life Open in that last short breath; Higher aims, Yes! greater gains Bring rewards of silent death.

RICHARD C. BUSBY.

The "Duke's" Torture Room

Who will it be today!—the question is written on the strained faces of every member of the body despite their manly efforts to show no feeling. All are smoking, except a few who are indulging in the nerve strengthening plug; some are seated in the windows; few in their regular seats—all are talking in that light-hearted manner that characterizes heroes before the conflict.

The bell!! the iron clatter, foretelling the moment of doom for some of their number, grates upon their ears. They rush to their seats.

And then he, the tyrannical "Duke," enters.

Oh! kind reader, do you realize what scene you are witnessing? You are among the nerve stricken, terrified members of the Senior Law class. You see them as they resign themselves to the fate of Pomeroy's Equity.

And then the persecution begins. Herron Mitchell has just finished a fine recitation—he sinks exhausted to his seat. Bob Bridgforth, with many a frantic gesture and an occasional Latin phrase, recites verbatim his answer. His finger taps his desk to indicate the commas as he reaches them. Patrick interrupts with a question. Marshall Amis is then called. With his name the weary ones, feeling safe, proceed to make up last night's loss of sleep. Bruce Newsom uses up four sheets of paper adding up his profits from the annual. Patrick asks another question. Jim Price and "Lord High Cornstopple" Brooks resume their preping. "Cupid" McCullough polishes his finger nails while "Judge" Clayton curls a real whisker on his upper lip. Pat is busy now trying to figure up another question, the remainder are either demolishing the back of the chairs with their knives or are studying their watches, praying for the hour to pass. Amis completes his recitation after a citation from the code and a review of several judges' opinions.

The hour is up—the sighs of relief almost obliterate the sound of the bell.

"Now, gentlemen, I've only assigned fifty pages in this book for tomorrow besides the fifteen code sections and the cases so—(Patrick asks another question)—so I'll expect you to get it up in fine order; there are many nice distinctions to be found there; every line is laden with honey which you must suck like busy bees, not like drones. You are excused."

A punch in the ribs of one of the somnolent ones causes him to swallow his plug. He awakes with a look of pained surprise asd rushes out in horrified expectancy.

(Exit class.) "Rev."

History of Senior Law Class

As God's great sun slowly sinks behind the Western horizon tinted with soft golden hues; as a million stars asleep soon wake to peep at the world far down below; as the silver moon with its beams so light overhangs the peaceful vale, we realize the approach of the oncoming shades of night and know that the day is fast drawing to a close. But time has passed, and with the coming of the morning the sky blue heavens are illuminated with the splendor of the sun's many rays of rainbow colors; then, too, we realize that the curtain of darkness is raised and know that another day full of beauty and radiance has been granted unto us.

Thus, having arisen in the early fall of 1915—the morning as it were, of the law course—and having blessed each member with the brilliancy of its grandeur as he labored and worked through the day of two years of toil, the sun of the Class of '17 is slowly sinking behind the Western horizon of success, tinted with refinement and culture; a million stars of ambition and determination have awakened to guide its footsteps across the sea of life; a moon that is silver with learning and knowledge throws out its beams of fairness and kindness; and we know that the curtain of the night of rest is being drawn upon the scenes of a fruitful day.

Ah, friends, into the twilight shades there creeps a tiny ray of sunshine—the diploma—and it will be the crowning glory of a day of toil, for as the morning of commencement day approaches nearer and nearer, and the sky-blue heavens of life are illuminated with the splendor of the sun's many rays of future happiness and prosperity, then, too, we realize that the curtain of the night of rest is raised and another day full of opportunity and promise by God's gracious favor has been granted unto the class of '17.

"Backward, turn backward, O Time in your flight."

It was during the past two years that we thought together, worked together, and were thrown together. It was during the past two years that we made friendships that will never die, but will live on and on. It was during the past two years that we formed ties that will bind our hearts together and will hold us close to one another.

To be sure there have been heartaches and disappointments. Our class has lost a number of its members. Some found it impossible to return for the second year because of financial embarrassment; others failed to keep up with the more determined or better qualified members of the class; others were called away by death. Twice did the Grim Reaper come into our midst and cut down two of our friends and classmates, just at the moment when their call and mission in life was about to be fulfilled and realized.

We will soon go forth to fight the battle of life, to bless the world, I hope, with an uplift for higher ideals of American manhood. We will be numbered in days to come among the leading lawyers of this and other states. Be proud of your profession; be an honor to it. As has been said by one of our leading jurists, "While it is cheap wit for many to say sneering things of our profession, yet, if you strike from Anglo-Saxon history the thoughts and deeds of lawyers, you rob it of more than half its glory. Blot from American society today the lawyer, and all the work that he does, and all the power that he exerts, and you leave society as dry and shifting as the sands that sweep over Sahara. For the mystic force that binds our civilization together and makes possible its success and glories, is the Law, and they who minister at its shrine and keep alive its sacred fires, are you and I, and that vast multitude of coworkers who boast of no higher title than that of lawyer."

Excelsior! The mighty battle cry! Let it be your watchword, and you will climb upward, until you, too, have reached the summit without the toll of your lives. Aspire to high ideals, and you will attain them. Place your ideal on the pinnacle of self-sacrifice and little by little, step by step, your highest ambition will be fulfilled and realized. May success crown your efforts in the future as it has in the past is the sincere wish of those who love you.

The Hobo Engineer

I sometimes think I'll quit this life and settle down and get a wife, by jove! Sometimes I think I would love to have some place I could call home, And settle down, no more to roam. But, hell, that very thing I've tried, And found myself dissatisfied. I've often tried to settle down To office work and live in town and act like civilized folk do, Take in the shows and dances, too, but I'd no more than get a start, Till "wanderlust" would seize my heart, and in my night dreams I would see The great white silence calling me, and at the chance I'd never fail To drop it all and hit the trail. Back to solitude again, With transit, level, rod and chain, to lead the simple life once more. And do the same thing o'er and o'er, day after day and week after week. Sometimes we go to town to seek a little fun, and sometimes—well, Sometimes we raise a little hell. We don't mean to, but then, you see, When we've been out two months or three, in silent places where the face Of white man seems so out of place, well—when we hit the "Great White Way" Our joyful spirits get full sway. We try to crowd into one night The joys of many months. 'Tain't right? Well maybe not. 'Tis not for me To shape our final destiny. But when our last survey is done, And tied up to the Great Unknown and to the Chief our records brought, Of lonely work with danger fraught, of hardships cheerfully endured, That best results might be secured. Against all this our little sprees Will seem as ponds compared to seas, and the Angels surely will decide. There's a balance on the credit side. And God, I think, will drop a tear And bless the "Hobo Engineer."

WINTER ON THE CAMPUS

One Hundred Fight

History of the Medical Class

At this season of the year we see scattered over the land many unique colonies of protoplasmic structures known to the world as "Meds of '17," each of them a member of a different phylum.

After an investigation of the Meds of '17, Phylum "Ole Miss," I discovered in them a spirit of zeal and a great desire to master the subject of their life's work. During their stay at "Ole Miss" they have traveled the usual weary road of a "Med," encountering many stumbling blocks, but have surmounted all, adding more and more laurels to their name.

But this class was not always in this high state of being. According to the theory of evolution, they were at one time in a lower stage of life, and have arrived at the present stage of life only after the slow process of development. In their period of change many met extinction, often the professors were vexed, but still the majority persisted. In their stage of Junior "Meds" many of their peculiar idiosyncrasies had been precipitated out by the chemical, biological and physical tests to which they were subjected. A little later in that year the professors perceived with keen delight that in accordance with the law of brogenesis, "Ontogeny repeats Phylogeny" the Junior Meds were evoluting in the same manner as they themselves had done in the days of yore.

The class has now reached their form, the finished product of "Ole Miss," the most complete realization of the ideals of the professors. Dr. Guyton says that with a little more manipulation he can remove most of the pathological worries, a couple of weeks under Dr. Robinson will bring their anatomy into the proper form, and lastly, Dr. Crider reports that with a few mere physiological experiments the internal mechanism of those who survive will be in perfect order.

If space would allow there might be said something of the inspiring theories in regard to the class's future, and as to the valuable addition the members will make to the ranks of the M. D.'s, but the building of air-castles will not be attempted here; the task will be left to you, kind reader, of building them for the Medical class of 1917.

"The Holiday's Afterglow"

It's the restless gang once more, fellows,
For all the clan's rolled in:
The work's going to be fierce they tell us,
Lots worse'n it's ever been.
And home and the girl left behind us,
With Christmas joys galore—
Such mem'ries serve oft to remind us
Of pleasures—a heaped up store.

It's down with the thought of learning,
When the wheels of the brain won't whirl
In the ways the Profs, are terming
The betterment of the world;
The ways that fancy would lead us,
Back to the home town hearth;
Such are the paths that impede us,
Yet seem of utmost worth.

The time'll seem long and weary,
For those whose brains must bend
To prove true the oft-sung theory,
"It's the man with the will who wins."
Now it's back to school from play time,
To work with the homesick crew,
And we won't go home till spring time—
We've five long months to be blue!

G. BRYAN.

Inconsistency

Gerald Jones, Arthur Gillette, and I were sitting on the veranda of Colonel Semmes' mansion among the foothills of the Sierras, near Hollywood. We had motored out from Los Angeles in response to Mrs. Semmes' invitation to dine informally and to meet two charming nieces from Maryland who were visiting them. We had found the young ladies brilliant, vivacious, and extremely attractive, the dinner had been an excellent one; the colonel's imported chef had surpassed any of his former efforts and the Italian butler had increased the enjoyment by his silent and efficient service. The wines that "held imprisoned in a heart of ruby" the sunlight of French vineyards had warmed the cockles of our hearts and now in the atmosphere of a summer's night, we sat and looked over the lights of the city below and above to the glistening stars in heaven's firmament. A gentle breeze from the nearby sea fanned our cheeks and the chirping of the crickets and other songs of the night heightened the feeling of relaxation which was rapidly stealing over us.

We had scarcely lighted our eigars when an orchestra, picturesquely attired in red coats and black trousers, seated themselves in the library from which glass doors opened upon the veranda and after a brief tuning of instruments began to play "The Sextette" from "Lucia." The music was wonderful and its effect upon the group on the veranda can scarcely be imagined. The colonel, Gillette and myself, being lovers of music were evidently impressed, but of the four, Jones was easily the most affected. I might explain here that Jones was an Englishman of excellent family and a talented young journalist. He had brought letters of introduction to Colonel Senimes from mutual friends abroad.

Our host explained that he had recently heard the musicians, who were Austrians, at a symphony concert and becoming fascinated by their playing had resolved to hear them at a private recital.

At this time the ladies rejoined us, the most beautiful of the nieces who was a perfect blonde, taking the seat which Jones offered her, whereupon he had taken another which was so near to her that I remember having envied him his position.

The orchestra gently discoursed some foreign airs, which were unknown to me, but Jones explained that they were Spanish ballads. They were very plaintive and in some subtle manner suggested unrequited love. The next selection were Neapolitan love songs. The players seemed to have caught the spirit of the warm Italian skies and the warmer love of the boatmen of Naples and Venice and to have poured it all out in their music.

Love seemed to pervade the atmosphere around us and it soon became the topic of conversation during the intervals between the numbers and indeed lasted long after the red-coated minstrels had departed. All save Jones entered heartily into the discussion, even the host and hostess becoming young again and agreeing that love was the greatest thing in the world. Jones, as I have said, took no part in the conversation and, as far as perfect breeding permitted, showed his displeasure at the course it had taken. We were all in a very sentimental mood and I blush for some of the loving thoughts that I expressed and no doubt the young ladies are as ashamed as I. I have said all, I mean all except Jones; he maintained a calm and collected air, finally unbending to state that he could never compel himself to love any woman.

I distinctly remember the damper which his words placed on the enthusiasm of the party and a few minutes after, the hour being advanced, we three departed, Gillette and I driving into the city and Jones taking the boulevard to the beach. Jones was customarily a very conservative driver, but this night he disappeared at a furious pace.

As I took my seat at breakfast the following morning, Togo, my Japanese butler, as was usual, passed me the morning "Tribune." The first headline that met my gaze was the following:

Young Journalist a Suicide

Unrequited Love Given as Cause in Note.

The article went on to state that Gerald Jones had committed suicide and after dwelling at length on his social and financial standing, proceeded to the details of the affair, finishing with a note which the deceased had written. He said that he had loved a beautiful English girl since childhood but that she had never returned his affection and that upon her marriage to another he had come to America to try and forget. He had been unsuccessful in subduing his love, he said, and had decided upon death as the only means of silencing the voice of his passion.

In conclusion, the article referred to a miniature of Jones' sweetheart which had been found wrapped in the note. The portrait, the writer said, was very artistically executed and showed the smiling features of a beautiful woman who was a blonde.

Illusion

Know you where you expect to find your Ideal?

Do you seek for him (her) here or afar?

Does he (she) dwell where the dawn meets the mist in the east,

Or under the western star?

Know you when you expect to find your Ideal?
In the far-away future, or now.
While the warm blood of youth fills and thrills the quick veins,
And Life is a sacred yow?

Know you how you expect to find your Ideal? Shall you meet in a throng, or apart? Shall it be among men, or alone—your first tryst, Where heart answers back to heart?

Knowest thou an Ideal is but a mirage?
That there's no Where, nor When, nor How;
That it's all but a Phantom that fades to the touch
Of a Fate that is greater than thou?

She ran a Cupid cabaret—
Herself the bill-of-fare—
The graces were her dancing girls
In gauze and yellow hair.

He caught the sign with kindling eyes,
And ventured into view.
She served him smiles, a kissing course,
A tender hug or two;

And still he sat and still she served And still he could not stir, Until he cashed a Cupid check And had the heart of her.

"The Sacrifice"

T WAS on the night of December the twenty-third, one of the coldest and dreariest of the winter of 1862, shortly after the first attempt to take Vicksburg, that they brought him in—a poor, frail creature, his uniform of grey covered by a long woman's cape. He was a young boy, pale, beardless face, wistful, blue eyes, soft as a girl's. But despite his appearance he bore himself well, and no question could make him answer to their satisfaction why he had attempted to pass the Union guards and so leave Vicksburg.

"Search the prisoner," commanded Halton, as they brought the little boy into the lighted tent. Two guards at once set to work. They searched him thoroughly from head to foot and at last found a small folded sheet of paper sewed in the collar of his shirt. The guard handed the paper to his superior who spread it out before him on the camp table.

Haiton studied the note for a few moments, a frown gathering on his face as he found that he could not decipher it, for it was written in code.

"Well, my young man, you will have to read this for us, and if you refuse to do so we will have you thrown into a cell."

The prisoner only grinned and hung his head. He did not utter a word in answer to Halton.

Seeing that he could not get much out of him with these tactics, Halton decided to try another plan.

"Where were you going, Johnnie?"

"To see my home and mother. She lives a short way from here in the country. On Christmas day nineteen years ago I was born and since then I have always spent Christmas with her, so I wished to be with her this time."

"Why were you going at this time of night, and carrying a secret code sewed in the collar of your shirt?"

"I got that shirt from a friend yesterday who was in the skirmish and died after reaching our fortifications. I did not know that the paper was there."

Although the boy told this without hesitancy and coolly, yet the officer could see that the prisoner was telling a ready lie.

Halton studied the boy's face, but never once did the boy's soft blue eyes waver, returning every glance of the officer's. A friendly smile spread over Halton's face as he turned again to the boy.

"Look here, boy, you have lied to me; you cannot hide it, but I will let that go if you will read this for me. If you will translate this code I will free you and give you a pass through our lines to your home; if not—you will be shot tomorrow as a spy."

The boy thought for a moment and then drawing nearer reached for the paper.

"Well."

Before he might have time to retract his promise the officer thrust the note into his hands. A tense, quiet moment passed as the boy examined the paper, then, with a smile of victory on his face, he tore the folded note into hundreds of pieces.

The guards caught him at once, and one struck him with the stock of his rifle, knocking him insensible, but they were too late, the note was destroyed.

When the lad regained consciousness he found himself on a straw mat in a room, his cell. It was morning. He lay there unmoving, watching the small ray of sunlight of the day before Christmas creep along the cell wall and disappear. At about noon the door opened; Halton and a guard entered. The hardened officer could not help but feel a tinge of compassion for the little fellow. Maybe he was thinking of his home in Ohio, and the wife and boy who were there waiting for him.

"You are sentenced to be shot tomorrow at dawn," he managed to say gruffly.

He had to turn to hide a mist that somehow came into his eyes.

"Sir, may I see my mother? She lives only a short distance from here. Please let me see her on this last afternoon."

It was against the rules, but Halton wanted to do something for the little fellow so he sent for the mother. And so she came, his mother, a woman of good proportions, about the same size of the boy with features very much like his. She was dressed in a heavy, plain dress of brown, a dark shawl thrown over her head.

She bore all very well, and though at first she cried a little, she never once tried to plead with Halton for the liberty of her son from a law that she knew was unbreakable. Halton had a kind heart. He left the two together for nearly an hour and did not keep a guard in the room with them. They parted quietly at dusk, and Halton watched her as she walked away into the deepening shadow of the evening. He returned to the prisoner's cell.

"Your supper will be brought to you soon. Good-by, boy." Halton did not know why he said that—he was thinking of his mother and dreaming of his home in the north. He almost forgot that he was one of the members of a cruei war.

The boy merely shook his head and drew the cape closer about his shoulders. Day broke in the east, the dull, heavy clouds of the early morn soon turning to a lighter grey and blue. It was Christmas day. The wind sighed among the bare, snow-coated limbs of the trees. From somewhere there came the sound of musketry.

Halton was in his tent reading when the guard summoned him. They hurried to the scene of the tragedy. There were several soldiers, their heads bared as they stood about the slender form on the ground. One had thrown aside his rifle and was kneeling by the body, tears running down his face. The heavy cape, that had once concealed so well, had slipped apart, the limp form of a woman was revealed. Halton felt his throat fill, and tears came to his eyes.

She was the mother of the prisoner. And this brave, little woman had died for her son. Nineteen years before on Christmas Day she had given him life, and now she had given it again.

History of Phi Sigma Literary Society

Debating societies have always been considered a necessary adjunct to any institution of learning. The improvement and development in declamation, debating, extemporaneous speaking, parliamentary drill, and public speaking to be gotten by members of good debating clubs is unexcelled. If the members have an abiding interest in the work and a determination to succeed for the society as well as for self, there can be no better experience gleaned from college life than may be secured within the forensic arena. Former students at "Ole Miss" realized this fact more keenly than is the present day practice, and two years after the founding of the University, an organization was established for the promotion of literary endeavor. The name of this society was Phi Sigma, or Philo Stephanie, meaning Lovers of Wisdom, and Causa laetet sed vis est notissima (the cause lies concealed, but the force appears), was chosen for the motto. Much interest was displayed in society work in these days, practically every student belonging to some society. The discipline was rigid, and places of preferment and honor in the society were avidly sought after by the contestants. A Phi Sigma magazine was published containing the literary efforts and combining the interests of all the members, and many a "gem of purest ray serene" found publication in its columns. An excellent library owned by the society furnished a source of material for varied literary efforts. But these halovon days were not to last, the Civil War retarded their development and after a period of about twenty years membership and interest waned until the library was sold and the hall reduced in

However, a move at retrenchment has characterized the work of the society in the last few years, and intercollegiate as well as intersociety debates have done much to reawaken the old-time interest. During the present year the membership has not been so large as in the past, but uniformly good work has been done. Debaters and orators of the first water have found their inspiration in Phi Sigma's historic halls. In the contest for the selection of the University representatives at the M. I. O. A. meet and at the Chautauqua at Crystal Springs, Phi Sigma captured both honors, J. P. McCain winning the first and T. J. O'Quin the second position. Four of the five contestants for these positions were members of Phi Sigma. The debating council has done excellent work this year and arranged debates with Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, Mississippi College, Millsaps College, and the University of Arkansas. The outcome of these debates is anticipated with the utmost confidence for with such men as Rainwater, Richardson, Williamson, and McWhorter to lead the attack, victory is assured. The interests and efforts of the members are gradually becoming more unified and with brighter hopes for a more abundant future than ever before, the end of this year's work closes a period of effort and achievement which Phi Sigma's members will not willingly forget.

RESULT OF THE ELECTION

The Freshman's Lament

I carry their laundry whenever I'm told.
I see that their trousers are pressed.
I hie for their letters in sun or in cold.
They don't mind disturbing my rest.

I steal them some breakfast the while they're abed.
I amuse when they suffer ennui.
I mount on the dishes and yell off my head
If such be requested of me.

I answer to "Freshman!" to "Here!" or to "Say!" (It's wondrous and weird that I'm named.)
I catch—um, whenever they're sad—or they're gay.
No matter what happens, I'm blamed.

L'ENVOI

Oh, I bawl bloody murder wherever I be;
Oh, I sound like a meal at the zoo;
And I howl like I'm planning to "lie down an' dee;"
But the louder—the sooner they quit—don't you see?
And you needn't be wasting compassion on me;
For Lord! I'm enjoying it, too!

D. R. Solomon, '16.

Fresh. Hutto: "I'm going to specialize in politics."

Ode to "Ole Miss"

Backward to years that have flown, Breathing of victories won, Forward through ages to come, Into the mystic unknown: Calling to thousands who love thee, Far from the paths that been Trodden by millions of footsteps—Those of the South's greatest men, —Throbs the voice of "Ole Miss."

Thronging with memories vast,
Lingering still in life's eve,
Brightening shadows oft cast,
Thoughts of our Varsity cleave:
Grateful watch e'er its progress,
Men who have sought other spheres—
Heights to which learning has left them,
On through the dusk of the years.
—It was thy power, "Ole Miss."

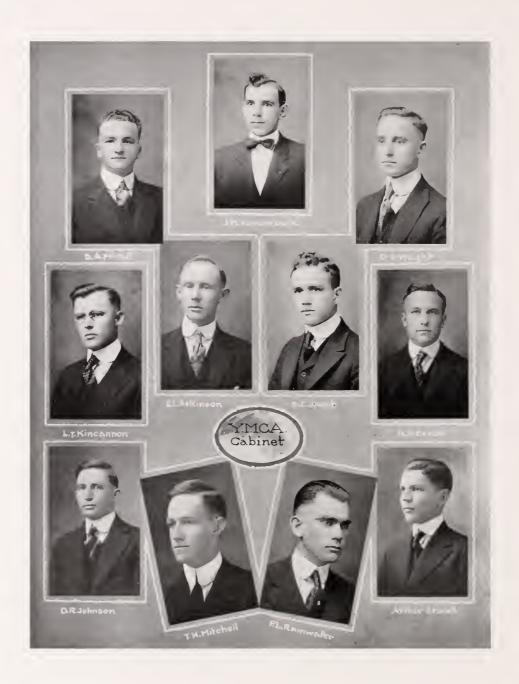

Youth, in the course of its flight Found here the way to its goal: Halls such as thine, in their might, Lift but to honor untold. Love thee, our Varsity splendid? Voicing the loudening strain, "Flourish, untarnished, forever," Time cannot cause thee to wane!

—Thy glory is ours, "Ole Miss."

But whose the Brain that sways our Varsity?
And whose the hand that steers "Ole Miss's "Course?"
'Tis not a Prof., but one that's mightier still—
Proudly we bow to POWERS' manly force

A smile can hide from students' anxious eyes
The will of Hume, but still it's there to stay—

To the Freshman

Time was when you in yesteryears

Exalted, claimed a Senior's envied share:
Time is, when you, debarred by fears
Can only hope, and yet can never dare.

Another rise; but still a fall,

For a Freshman's lowly plane you stand;
Tis vain to vaunt of glories gone, and all

Ex-Seniors feel should loose the Freshman's bane,
Oft dreams of home rise thru the gloom

Of midnight oils; the weary, burdened brain
No glamour sees in quiet of college room;

Still longed for joys refuse to come again.

Before you lies the trodden way;

Tis hard to climb, but duty lures you on:
Ere long dark shadows roll away,

And college life reveals its brighter dawn.

'Tis not all dark: the sunny side
Is seen full oft, and love for Red and Blue
Outlives the scoffs, tho still deride
The upper classmen, vain, with honors due.

Yet, welcome to our Varsity!

We were ourselves once green—and young—like you;
Time lifted us, and so will thee;

It measures all by things that we can do.

Then mourn not, homesick Freshies,
For you shall have your envied day,
And know each other better,
When "hazy" mists have rolled away.

CAPTAIN ANDERSON

Captain Anderson

Big, husky, aggressive, with three years' experience in college football, "Ceph" was the logical man to captain the 1916 team. He was one of the best centers Ole Miss has produced in years, his passing was always quick and accurate, his defensive work always of the shining variety. But his Irish, fighting spirit was the predominating quality that made him a football star. He was a born fighter and even at times when the odds were hopelessly against him he fought still. He played in every game of the season and at all times his never-say-die spirit was with him, at every moment his voice could be heard encouraging and urging his men to fight to the end. Add to this his natural qualities of leadership and his thorough knowledge of the game gained through years of experience and you have the ideal captain and leader.

Niles Moseley: "Let's see now."

"14-31-18-5—Hit the Line Fiercely, Fellows"

In these wild times of progressive football it behooves us all to wise up a little on the new rules, and also on how the rooters as well as the human beings, should behave, how the spectators should spectate, and how the players should become proficient in the gentle are of felonious assault.

Suggestions to the Spectators

In the first place stand on the sidewalk when the ladies pass with slit skirts, and watch the sidelines.

If a young lady allows a young man just raising a mustache to kiss her, it may be called a touchdown.

If you have a couple of charming young ladies with you, and in the midst of the game the rooters begin to chant "Hold 'em! Hold 'em!" it doesn't mean that you must take both of them on your knees.

Spectators should find it comfortable to wear soft cushions.

If it is extremely cold you will be quite in style if you wear a red nose.

When there comes an exciting moment in the game do not kick the man in front of you lustily in the back. He may be a professor—or twice your size.

If some one pushes you off the end of the bleachers you will be penalized five yards for being "off-side."

Hints to the Rooters

Any rooter who shouts anything the spectators can comprehend will be penalized fifteen yards,

As a good, encouraging yell the following is an old stand-by: "WERE-DURNFOOLS—TAKIMOUT—TAKIMOUT—DONNORULES—COUGH—SNEEZE—PIKER—BUYABARGAIN!!!!"

Active rooters should stand out in front of the spectators, work up a facial expression indicative that they are dying of ptomaine poison, and grunt in unison "Holedum, holedum, holedum, holedum, holedum,"

Rooters should wear colored sweaters over their shoulders, like shawls, fuzzy hats of colors corresponding to that of the college, with neckties and socks to match, and high water trousers. Otherwise the spectators will think them only temporarily insane instead of hopeless nuts.

Nate Williamson: "By gracious you're right."

Every rooter should see to it that he approaches the referee and tells that official why he is wrong, why he doesn't know enough to referee a ping-pong game, and why he hasn't the brains of a dessicated gum-drop.

Advice to the Players

It should also be remembered that it is ungentlemanly to kick a player in the eye unless he happens to be an opponent. And lastly, when falling on the ball keep your head covered up so that your friends can recognize you at the funeral

No player should bite more than one nose from each opponent.

Knocking your opponent's teeth half out counts as a kicked goal. Knocking all his teeth out is equal to a touchdown.

No more than three players on either side are allowed to die on the field at the same time.

In tackling keep at least one foot on the ground, but it is not necessary to have more than two feet on the ground.

Remember that there is plenty of room at the top, especially in a scrimmage. In a scrimmage, any player who has the foot of an opponent fairly in his mouth is allowed to bite that foot steadily until the referee blows his whistle.

A word to the Referee

Remember that anywhere from two to sixty thousand eyes are upon you and from two to sixty thousand ears are listening to your decisions.

Everyone is listening to learn whether the side with the ball has made a gain. At every down, stand up, throw out your chest, and shout: "TSURMPLETUG YURRUDSGAIN!"

If anyone yells, "What was that?" repeat it in a louder tone. It may be possible that your voice is weak, but your enunciation should be as perfect as the past of the prodigal son.

Be sure and penalize both sides every few minutes, or else the spectators won't think you are on the job.

Always act as a gentleman. If one or more of the players are killed, do not keep on with the game: take out four or five minutes, giving the ambulance sufficient time to arrive.

—A. H. B.

B. E. Bookout: "Freshman, you get twenty-five for that.".

CAPTAIN WING

Captain Wing

What "Allie" lacked in avoirdupois was more than offset by his speed and experience. Never a flashy or brilliant player, his work at guard was always steady and consistent. It was this steadying influence on his team-mates and his experience that made him a most valuable captain. His thorough knowledge of the game was gained through long experience on the courts. Entering the University 'way back in the dark ages-in 1911, to be exact-with the advantage of two years on the high school team at Greenville, he learned the finer points of the game along with stars of former days, such as Walton, Pound, Shields and Haxton. As a result, he produced harmony and co-operation among his teammates, exerted a steadying influence at all times, and inspired a feeling of confidence. Under his leadership, the team enjoyed a successful season.

Bob Campbell (presiding judge): "I object to that testimony." Coralie Blackstone: "I'm a woman of sorrow and miserable all the time."

CAPTAIN HOLMES

Captain Holmes

In the past few years Ole Miss has shown a decided preference for pitchers to lead her fortunes on the diamond and this year has been no exception, Holmes, along with Chandler in 1914 and McInnis in 1916, being the third moundsmancaptain in four seasons. In the election of D. W., not only was fitting reward bestowed for valiant service in the box but at the same time the wisest choice possible was made. He has played on the team for the past two seasons and is one of the best college pitchers in the South. Last year he was selected by Heisman of Georgia Tech, for a berth on his All-Southern team, accompanied by a very flattering write-up. In addition to his pitching skill and long experience on the diamond. Holmes is very popular among the players, holds their respect, and is the kind of man they will work hard for. He is cool and collected at all times during a game and many times at a crucial moment his cool head has kept the men from going up in the air. He is one of the few men who play baseball with his head as much as with his hands and feet. These qualities taken togetherexperience, leadership, popularity, coolness, all of which are possessed by Holmes —go to make the ideal captain, and we predict a successful season for the team under his guidance.

The Outlook in Baseball for 1917

While it is too early in the season to prophesy just what the team is going to do, yet it is already evident that Ole Miss is going to be represented on the diamond by a pretty swell ball club. Three games have now been played and three have been won, one of which was a victory over the strong University of Illinois team. Considering the earliness of the season, this was one of the best games ever played on the local lot and it calls up to the minds of the old timers the game won from the same team back in the spring of 1912, with McInnis, then a Freshman, pitching. Such a flying start augurs well for a successful season.

Practice opened with a rather discouraging outlook for Coach Baxter Sparks. Only five former 'Varsity men, in the persons of Holmes, Bethea, Beanland, Sharborough, and Wilson, were returned. Ex-Captain McInnis and the peerless "Pete" Allen at first were missing. Cassibry and Anderson, the two star receivers of last year, were gone. The old infield was shot to pieces with Murray missing at short and Carr at second. Beanland was the only regular left in the outfield and a pitching staff had to be built up around Captain Holmes and Wilson. It was no easy task that faced Coach Sparks and it was evident from the first day of practice that a team of individual stars could not be hoped for and that our chances for a winning team lay in the development of a well-balanced team working as one, as a unit. Under these conditions Baxter set to work, has won the first three games of the schedule and has about completed the selection of his team.

Viewed as a whole, the team is a fair one at fielding but weak at the bat. The pitching staff alone looks stronger than last year. Yet the team as a whole is a better balanced one than that of 1916 and no glaring weaknesses stood out in the Illinois game. The men worked well together, seemed to have plenty of confidence, and every play was intelligently executed. For these good results, we cannot help but give full credit to Coach Baxter Sparks—an old Southern League player and one of the wisest in the business.

With the strong Illinois team already played and defeated, we have dared to lift the veil from the future and to peer into the things to come just a little bit. And although the vision is somewhat dim, yet we believe we can discern victories for the team of 1917 over A. & M., Millsaps and Mississippi College, the winning of the state championship, and a beginning of the climb of Ole Miss athletic teams back into the ranks of the mighty and powerful.

Instruction—instructors—service.

These are the three absolute essentials that you should consider in selecting a school; and they must be considered as one, each being dependent upon the other. The failure of one means the failure of the other two. This school is proud of its courses of instruction, its instructors, and the service it renders to its students and through them to the business world. Education is not for one day, but for life.

Individual supervision.

Our instruction is made the more valuable in the degree to which the student's work receives individual supervision. In this school, each student's work receives personal supervision of the instructors in charge of the course; the instructor calling attention to any error in principle or form, giving reasons for criticism.

FACULTY.

The supremacy of the Stranaland Colleges is to a large extent due to its unequalled faculty. The instructors are men and women with years of active professional practice, which gives them the practical experience so essential to their work of instructing young people in the principles of Bookkeeping, Gregg and Pitman Shorthand, Touch Typewriting, Business Letter-Writing, Commercial Law and Commercial Arithmetic. They know what is required of the young man or young woman in business offices and teach them accordingly.

CATALOGUE.

VAN-LAX

FOR THE LIVER

After experimenting for several years we have at last perfected a wonderful prescription FOR THE LIVER, to take the place of Calomel. Produces the desired effect without the sickness subsequent to dosing with Calomel. Can be taken morning, noon or night, so you need not wait for a day off. It makes you feel better—not worse. No gripping, no pain, no nausea. Everybody should take a dose occasionally and keep well.
